Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Central Business District Preservation Study, Vol. 2: Part II: Draft Summary of Findings, September 1980 Taking an unconventional view of the city's recent past, the city planner Lewis Mumford has observed that Boston was fortunate that it experienced economic stagnation in the 1930 s, 1940 s and 1950 s. Otherwise, he maintains, the city would have lost its 19th century architectural heritage to new construction and we would find ourselves Living and working in a very different environment today. Boston did, of course, emerge from its long economic slump and embark upon an impressive era of economic development, beginning in the 1960 s. And a good number of older buildings were replaced by new highrise towers that have altered both the skyline and the streetscape of downtown Boston in dramatic fashion. Today, in 1980, development interest and activity in the downtown continue to be strong - - and in this fact lies the possibility that Boston could, in the decade ahead, become the victim of its own success. This is not to say that economic growth and activity is not crucial to the city's future or that every old building in Boston should remain, untouched forever. But it is meant to suggest that many factors must be considered in individual development decisions, not the least of which is what are the existing resources on any given potential development site. Because not only are many of downtown Boston's older structures significant for their architectural or historical value, but many buildings also make a contribution individually and collectively to Boston's sense of scale and manageability - - the very attributes that draw people...
